“Networking & Building Relationships for A/E Professionals”

1 PDH – pending

It’s doubtful that you’ll ever see a class in an engineering school related to building strong relationships. However, one could make a case that your network along with your communication skills together drive how successful you can be as an A/E manager. Building relationships is difficult for anyone to do, let alone an A/E professional who spends most of their time on very technical topics. This session will walk you through easy to implement actions that you can take on a daily basis to improve your networking skills and start to build relationships day in and day out.

If you can learn to build relationships effectively, they will pay dividends and contribute to you being one of the best if not THE best engineering manager in your firm. The is because relationships can yield opportunities nonstop for you and your firm including new business, new ways to expose your expertise to the world, and of course fulfillment and satisfaction in your career which is priceless.

1 PDH - pending

Engineering professionals are rarely taught management or leadership skills in school. They have to learn these skills on the job or suffer the consequences. One of the key components of leadership is PEOPLE. Great leaders know how to engage and inspire people.

In this session, you will learn how to implement specific strategies that can help you maximize your relationships with the people you work with, like the power of positivity, the importance of open communication with your staff, understanding your role as a leader, and effective delegation. This session will also cover the theory of high output management. You will learn how to use leverage to the maximum advantage of you, your firm, and your staff.

“NJDEP Linear Construction Technical Guidance: The First Six Years”

1 PDH – Pending

In 2012, as part of the reforms made to the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection’s (NJDEP) Site Remediation Program, the Department and a group of transportation and utility stakeholders developed the Linear Construction Technical Guidance Document (January 2012). Over the following six years, the linear construction approach has benefitted owners [agencies], design consultants, and contractors alike, through streamlining the investigation, planning, and management of contaminated materials on transportation infrastructure projects from the final design phase to construction. This session will highlight the successes of linear construction strategies implemented on large roadway projects in the State of New Jersey and will identify specific areas of improvement needed to enhance the policy. Two project examples will demonstrate the application of linear construction guidance on these projects during final design and during a long-term, multi-contract construction program.
